

API Protection Under Copyright Is Upheld by Federal Circuit

06.04.14

There has been a lingering, divisive question in the software industry as to whether application programming interfaces (APIs) are entitled to copyright subject matter protection. Critics argue that this type of source code is functional in nature and, as such, should not be protected by copyright. However, in Oracle America, Inc. v. Google, Inc., CAFA... Continue Reading