Practices: Business Divorce; Business Litigation; Business Divorce for Family Law Matters; Business Divorce for Majority Owners; Business Divorce for Minority Investors

Brad Monk is a trial lawyer with a broad range of litigation experience. He devotes the majority of his practice to resolving disputes in the healthcare, oil and gas, real estate, and finance and banking industries, and he has significant experience in high-profile jury trials, including first chair trial experience in a complex oil and gas/land use case. Brad regularly advises his clients on their business interests and disputes and, when necessary, utilizes the courts to protect and enforce the rights of his clients, which range from privately held start-ups to publicly traded companies ranked in the top ten of the Fortune 500. He has extensive experience in state and federal courts and in arbitration proceedings and has prevailed as first chair trial counsel in fraud, breach of contract, oil and gas, and personal injury cases. Brad's extensive litigation experience also includes representing clients in disputes involving issues of professional liability, trade secret, medical device, non-compete, and product liability.
