John Adolph is a finance attorney, representing financial institutions (including national, regional and local banks), non-traditional lenders, debt funds, developers, and investors in connection with projects throughout the country, including Texas, Florida, California, New York, and Louisiana.

John has extensive experience in commercial real estate loans for office, retail, healthcare, multi-family, and mixed-use developments, with a significant focus on transactions involving data centers, energy projects, cell towers, fiber optic lines, and manufacturing properties. He also handles credit facilities for various operating businesses, including cash-flow and asset-based financings, middle market and large syndicated financing, mezzanine loans, preferred equity, loan-on-loan financing, participations, intercreditor agreements, and the acquisition and sale of note portfolios.

Additionally, he is skilled in loan workouts, including forbearance agreements, loan assumptions, foreclosures, guarantor litigation and recovery, and all phases of post-foreclosure management.

John draws on a deep understanding of business risk in his representation of startups and emerging and mid-market companies, investors, and entrepreneurs, having served as external general counsel in addition to representing businesses with formations, joint ventures, mergers and acquisitions, restructurings, vendor agreements, and technology transactions.

Outside of the office, John enjoys testing the top 50 barbeque restaurants in Texas for quality, bird hunting with his dog Woody, skiing and biking in Colorado, and slowly—but surely—learning to fly fish.
